Borrowing from the idea of "flipping the classroom," Ms. Bisognano's National Forum keynote was titled "Flipping Health Care" to describe the need to move from a system that does things to patients to one that works with patients to achieve the best results. As one example, Bisognano noted how a medical encounter fundamentally changes when a provider goes from focusing only on illness - asking, "What's the matter?" - to centering the care on an individual's needs - asking ...

"Flipping Health Care" from the Patient's Perspective ...

It puts the person, not the disease or the condition, at the centre of improving health and healthcare. Flipping healthcare means flipping the balance of care from the hospital to the community; the balance of delivery from individual providers to care teams; the balance of power from the provider to the patient and family; the balance of costs from treatment to prevention and co-production; and the balance of emphasis from volume to value and from healthcare to health.

Bisognano M, Schummers D. Flipping healthcare: An essay by Maureen Bisognano and Dan Schummers. British Medical Journal. 2014;349:g5852. The authors argue that to meet today's health care challenges, we need to flip our thinking to develop innovative models of care that can improve health, improve care delivery, and lower costs – the goals of the Triple Aim.
