("the restoration of constitutional order"). Nor do they feel allegiances to those at home who will never understand. "Half-truths everywhere," one soldier says. "Half-sincerity, half-friendship. I can't accept that.

Arkady Babchenko's "One Soldier's War" - Words Without Borders

One important explanation for soldiers' resilience is the idea of the 'primary group': men were motivated above all by comradeship as they fought alongside friends and companions. Effective training also helped, making soldiers familiar with the chaos and fear of the battlefield so that their actions in battle became second nature to them.
